3 PRICE TALK finished first in each of his first three starts last year while showing handy speed and strong finishes each time; Gio Ponti loss as the favorite not as disappointing as it may seem after getting bumped at the start and then being rated back to give away position in a race that didn't come back for him; upside for an excellent trainer. 7 ANALYZE IT has a race available to him that would bury this field, but some question remains as to whether he is still capable of that effort after missing a lot of time; looked good handling weaker off the long layoff last September, but he was flat as the favorite in the Shadwell Turf without apparent excuse, and he is likely to take money in this race once again. 2 RINALDI's four wins to date have all come vs. restricted company, but he ran well in the Saranac at the end of his 3yo campaign, and also gave a good account of himself when moving right along on the lead in the Artie Schiller last November, where he only succumbed stubbornly late.
