

CLOSER LOOK: NY-breds four career wins to date have all come over route distances, including a victory in the Albany as a 3yo, but he has not run poorly in his three starts since cutting back to sprint late last year; came through on the rail and was in contention to mid-stretch in the Say Florida Sandy last time, before taking several bumps from My Boy Tate and ultimately having to take up; it can be debated whether he was ever going to win that race, but he was clearly interfered with in that spot while still having a shot at it; not out of this but he needs some pace.
